Britain gets bombed but it's Islam that gets the sympathy

What about showing some solidarity with the British people?

DEFEND
LIFE

OUR PEOPLE, our Christian values and our British way of life are under attack from Islamic extremists living in our very midst.

Fifty-six innocent people, making their way to work in our capital city, are no longer with us because of bombs planted by the followers of a dangerous, archaic creed that wants to take civilisation back to the Middle Ages.

You would have thought that our police forces would be rallying around to show support for the British people and increasing vigilance on the communities from where the suicide bombers hailed.

You would have thought that our trade unions would be boosting the morale of the British people, urging them to stand firm in the face of this aggression from fanatics who are prepared to indiscriminately kill to further their ends.

But you would be wrong. Police in Nottinghamshire are wearing green ribbons to show solidarity with the Muslim community.

Twenty thousand Good Faith ribbons have been distributed to officers which is meant to symbolise belief that Islam is a peaceful religion.

Chief Constable Steve Green said:

"We have a huge number of Muslim citizens in Nottinghamshire. They feel intimidated and sometimes ostracised and have the perception that the white community suspects everybody with a brown face of being a suicide bomber."

Green's prompt initiative over Islamic ribbons is in stark contrast to his force's depressingly slow clear-up rate for crime in Nottinghamshire. His force is under review by the Home Office after it was revealed that cases had to be "farmed out" to other forces to get them solved.

Bedfordshire Police were another force who took swift action, this time with regard to the hunt for terrorists. They issued an 18-point guide to officers dealing with Muslims who are suspected of terrorism.

Officers must:

- CONSULT community leaders before raids into Muslim houses.
- NOT search occupied bedrooms and bathrooms before dawn.
- NOT use police dogs in raids as it will desecrate the premises.

Met put skin colour before skill and knowledge

BRITISH school leavers wanting to join the Metropolitan Police will have to wait up to three years to join because ethnic minority applicants are being prioritised and selected first.

Non-white Met Officers make up 7% of the force and the Government wants this raised to 25% by 2009. To meet this target, ethnic recruits are being fast tracked into the force to such an extent that they currently make up one-in-six of all new recruits.

CHANGING: A passing out parade at Hendon college in 2001. Because of 'prioritisation' 17% of recruits now come from an ethnic minority.

A spokesman for the Metropolitan Police Federation was concerned about the current policy:

"There is positive action which is legitimate, and positive discrimination which is not. The line between the two is getting very narrow indeed.

"The criteria for joining should be the same for all - can you do a very complicated and difficult job as well as the next person?

"We need diversity, we need an eclectic mix of skills and knowledge, but focusing on certain elements may be to the detriment of the service."

Any programme of recruitment that prioritises ethnicity over skill and knowledge is likely to lower standards and the performance of the force.

Angel Fingers in the asylum till

A PROPERTY company which earns millions of pounds thanks to government contracts for housing asylum seekers is under investigation for financial irregularities.

Based in Docklands in London, the Angel Group has had contracts with the National Asylum Support Service (Nass) for five years, housing asylum seekers in Yorkshire and the North-East. Last year its income from its houses and hostels was over £20 million. Police are investigating claims that the company charged the Home Office and Leeds city council for the same properties and claimed discounts on council tax to which it was not entitled.

Because of the sensitive nature of finding homes for what are in most cases just illegal immigrants, the Angel Group has signed a secrecy agreement with the Labour Government not to comment about its contracts.

THE HORRIFIC murder of black teenager, Anthony Walker, by a gang of white thugs in a park in Huyton, Merseyside quite rightly received extensive coverage in the media because racist killings like this one 'are still fairly unusual in the UK'.

That's according to Ian Jolly, producer of the BBC's highly-regarded Newsnight programme.

So it was surprising that the stabbing to death of 28-year-old Richard Whelan, from Kentish Town, north London, on a number 43 bus in an unprovoked attack by a black assailant on the same day apparently didn't warrant nationwide coverage. Maybe these type of racist attacks are not unusual in Britain today.

It was this discrepancy in the BBC's coverage of the two murders that led to a deluge of email complaints to the corporation and the response from the Newsnight producer.

Ian Jolly admitted the BBC was selective in the prominence it gave certain stories:

"Last year a young white teenager was abducted and murdered in Glasgow by a gang of Asian youths. It was clearly a racist incident, but received barely any coverage outside Scotland. That, to me, suggests that the BBC needs to think very carefully about the prominence it affords certain stories. "All racist murders are abhorrent, but by treating them differently, the BBC leaves itself open to all sorts of accusations."

Such honesty from the producer of a news programme at the BBC is very welcome. Let's hope that it signals a loosening of the grip held by those politically correct zealots who have been doctoring our news by "the prominence it affords certain stories" since New Labour came to power.

KRIISS DONALD: His racist murder wasn't afforded prominence by the BBC outside of Scotland.

"Can you please help us Councillor Exley?"

West Yorkshire police turn to the BNP to help quell rising tension in Dewsbury

IN THE wake of the terrorist attacks on London and the subsequent police investigation which revealed that the four suicide bombers came from West Yorkshire, relations between the Muslim population and local people in the region have become strained.

In Dewsbury, in the middle of August, these tensions boiled over one evening and there was a confrontation and then a stand-off between the two communities.

As police tried desperately to avoid a serious riot, they called in Muslim leaders to try to calm the situation and find out how the trouble had started. The local population too were upset by what had taken place earlier in the evening and wanted their community spokesman to explain their side of events.

West Yorkshire police said they could call the local Labour councillor, but that idea was turned down.

"Go and get the BNP", one lady told the senior officer.

"Yes, the BNP can speak on our behalf," suggested another.

So West Yorkshire Police telephoned Kirklees councillor, David Exley, who was the BNP candidate in Dewsbury at the General Election and polled over 13% of the vote, and asked him to come out and help them calm what was a very tense situation.

Thankfully David was able to do just that. He reassured the local people that their views would be heard and despite not being their local councillor, he would defend their interests and represent them in any subsequent inquiry.

BNP Chairman, Nick Griffin, told Freedom that he hoped that this signalled a change in the way that the police in Yorkshire would treat the British National Party.

"West Yorkshire police have the reputation of being the most politically correct force in the country. Its persecution of BNP members last year after the BBC's docu-drama on the party was a scandal and the prosecution of Mark Collett and myself is outrageous.

"Possibly the events in London in July have been a wake up call to the force. It has seen that we have been proved right on a number of issues, so hopefully police chiefs are beginning to take on board what we are saying and acknowledge that the BNP is regarded as a community leader for many people in West Yorkshire.

*Lancashire Police also asked the BNP for help. Councillor Len Starr met with senior officers to discuss the implications of 7/7 on the local community in Burnley.

TUC launch campaign against Pakistani poverty

WITH British jobs being offshored to Pakistan and the Indian sub-continent at an alarming rate and British workers being pushed out of their jobs here at home by a growing army of cheap migrant labour, you would have thought the TUC would have had their hands full fighting for their members' future.

But no, our Trades Union Congress is using its time and those hard earned union dues paid by British workers to tackle poverty, poor health and create jobs for Muslims of Pakistani and Bangladeshi origin living in Britain.

BRENDAN BARBER: TUC will show solidarity with Muslim communities.

General Secretary, Brendan Barber, will visit mosques in Leeds, Birmingham and London to launch the campaign and also to "show solidarity" with Muslim communities against the calls for Muslims to integrate, or "give up crucial parts of their identity".

The TUC report 'Poverty, Exclusion and British People of Pakistani and Bangladeshi Origin' was based on independent research and official data, including information from the Office of National Statistics and 2001 Census. It found that more than 90% of the Pakistani and Bangladeshi communities were Muslim and together they made up 60% of UK Muslims.

Wilf Sullivan, the TUC's race equality officer, called on the Government to ensure that job creation programmes focused on areas with high populations of people of Pakistani and Bangladeshi origin.

'Brits' fighting Brits?

NEARLY one hundred Muslim men have left Britain to join the insurgents who are fighting British troops in Iraq.

M15 boss, Eliza Manningham-Buller, warned Tony Blair that fighters were leaving their homes in Yorkshire and the West Midlands to go to Iraq.

The Home Office said that the recruits were mainly Muslim men in their twenties. Some have been recruited by radical imams in mosques, others have been lured to the cause by appeals on websites. They include Britons and nationals from other countries, including north Africa, who had settled in Britain.

Job done, so Robert's off

Kilroy woz 'ere

BACK in February of last year, Labour Party adviser Philip Gould warned Tony Blair that the British National Party were on the verge of a major breakthrough at the European Elections.

In April of last year the former Labour MP and popular chat show host, Robert Kilroy-Silk emerged from the political wilderness to join the United Kingdom Independence Party and announce he would be standing for them at the European Elections.

In May of last year, Labour Party supporter and successful publicist, Max Clifford, announced that he would be managing the publicity for UKIP's European Election campaign.

In June of last year, after a deluge of media coverage, UKIP attracted a huge vote at the European Elections. The BNP, despite polling 808,200 votes, failed to win a single seat.

FOR UKIP OR LABOUR?: It was the Max Clifford publicity machine that made Robert Kilroy-Silk a success.

In October of last year Kilroy-Silk announced he was resigning from UKIP to form another party, Veritas. In July of this year Kilroy-Silk announced he was resigning from Veritas and leaving British politics. Last month it was revealed that Robert Kilroy-Silk last signed the attendance register at the European Parliament on April 12th.

So in a period of just over 12 months, Robert Kilroy-Silk returned to British party politics, scuppered the BNP's European Election effort and then once again retired from British party politics! Anyone believe in conspiracy theories?

Lord Labour Donor

LAKSHMI Mittal, Britain's richest man who recently gave £2m to the Labour Party, is being lined up for a seat in the Lords.

He is one of a number of wealthy British-based Asians, including Sir Gulam Noon, another Labour Party donor, expected to be given peerages. The ennobling of Mittal and Noon follows that of other major Labour donors including Lord Sainsbury, Lord Drayson, Lord Hamlyn, Lord Paul and Lord Bhattacharya.

Maybe we should be looking out for Lord Kilroy-Silk sometime next year.

North West MEP fights for jobs in Pakistan

KARIM: Pakistani interest?

THE TEXTILE industry of the North West of England has been all but destroyed by foreign imports.

So you would have thought that a North West Euro MP would have been fighting tooth and nail to defend what jobs are left in the Lancashire mills.

But Liberal Democrat MEP, Sajjad Karim, has in fact blocked moves to try to limit Pakistani textile exports coming to Britain. Karim claims that denying Pakistani textiles access to the British market will cost jobs back in Pakistan.

Voters in the North West who elected Karim to the European Parliament have every right to be worried as to where their MEP's loyalties actually lie - with Britain or with Pakistan.

New Labour is ripping the heart out of the Royal Navy

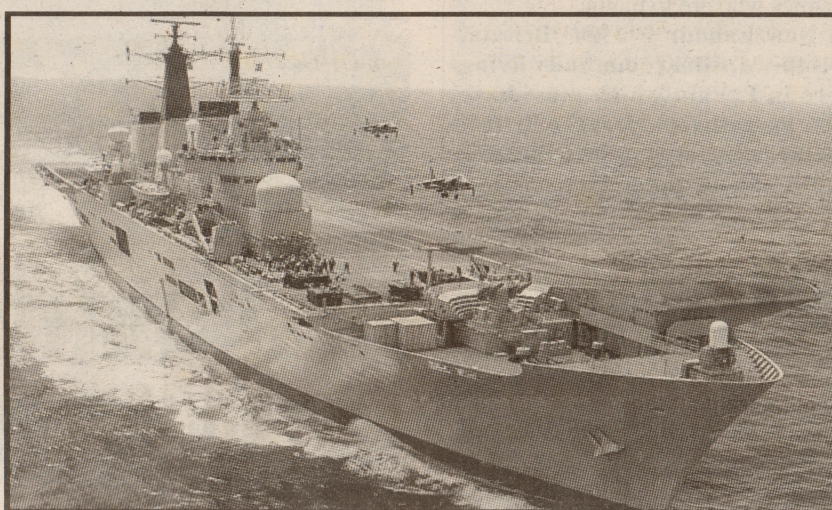

LAST MONTH the aircraft carrier HMS Invincible sailed into Portsmouth naval base for the last time. The proud veteran of the Falklands War was flying her paying-off pennant and now faces a future languishing at the back of the dockyard until 2010 when she will either be sold or scrapped.

The Labour Government is ripping the heart out of our Royal Navy. HMS Invincible is the 13th warship that has been axed prematurely, leaving Britain with just one aircraft carrier ready for operations.

But Tony Blair and Co. are only carrying on the work started by the Tories after the Falklands War, with ruthless cuts in the defence budget biting deeply into the Royal Navy's fighting strength.

Britain has been left with an escort force of just 25 destroyers and frigates. Already this year HMS Norfolk, the first Type 23 frigate, was decommissioned after just 16 years in service. In June, sister ship HMS Malborough sailed into Portsmouth for the last time after being deemed surplus to requirements, and a third frigate, HMS Grafton will follow them into the annals of Royal Navy

Only last year the Chief of Naval Staff, Admiral West, warned that our intelligence service believed that a terrorist strike at sea on our merchant navy was a distinct possibility. But a report from the National Audit Office warns that the Navy's readiness to defend our shores will continue to decline because of lack of funds and that only half of what fleet is left by 2010 would be operational. It's not only the decline in the number of warships that is of concern. Naval manpower is down to an all-time low of 35,000 trained men and women.

Naval historian, Rear-Admiral Richard Hill, has no doubts that the Royal Navy is suffering from continuous defence cuts - first by the Tories and now by New Labour.

"Insidious cuts are constantly sapping away at the navy, once a year or more often. It's a gradual process in terms of the number of people as well as ships.

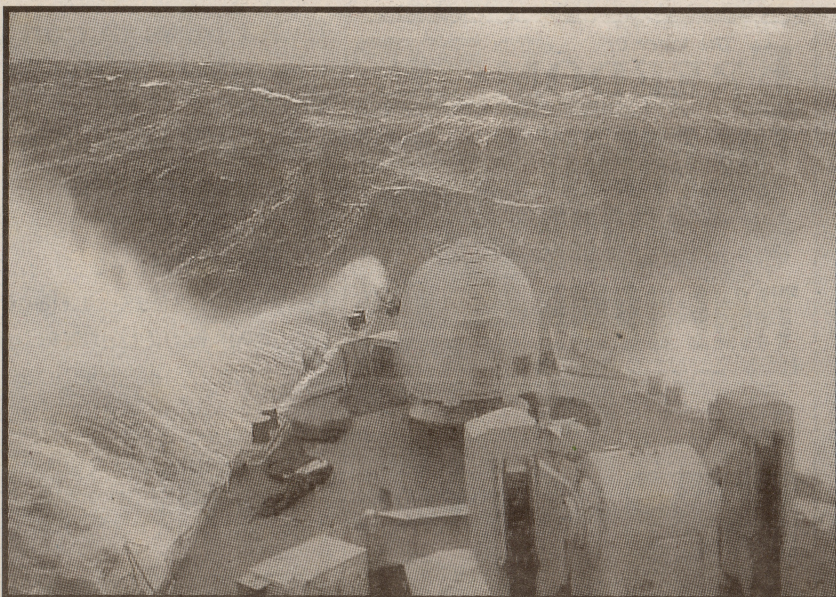

"If we suddenly needed more ships, we wouldn't have enough skilled people to man them."

1,700 jobs lost at RAF base

THE RAF base at Innsworth in Gloucestershire is to close with the loss of 1,700 jobs.

RAF Innsworth has been in operation for 70 years and during the war years, over 5,000 staff worked there.

The closure, in an effort to cut costs, will have a devastating effect on the local economy.

THE GEORDIE GUNBOAT: HMS Newcastle was the longest serving Type 42 destroyer. She was launched at Swan Hunter in Wallsend in April 1975 but decommissioned in January 2005.

Media scare stories and union bullies

LABOUR Party supporters within the media are abusing their position to frighten the public from joining or supporting the British National Party.

The 'fright tactics' involve making up stories suggesting that BNP teachers will be sacked or that fire brigades can ban British National Party members. Similar stories have also been used relating to the civil service and police. These scare tactics are the brainchild of Labour's anti-BNP think-tank and their friends in the Trade Unions.

One scare story came from the Unison AGM last year when secretary, Dave Prentiss, told delegates:

"I'll tell you who will be the first to be expelled from our own union, if I have my way. Mr Robert Baggs - the Unison member who stood as a BNP candidate in the South West on 10th June. There is no room for BNP activists. We will search them out". But 12 months on Robert Baggs is still waiting to 'be found'.

"I have received a letter from Unison asking for me to confirm my Unison membership details which I have gladly done, and another letter asking me if I am the same Mr Baggs that stood in the European Election last year," Robert told Freedom.

"I replied to both communications promptly but haven't heard anything. "If the union put as much effort into looking after its members' jobs, as it does in bullying individual members, then morale in the health service would not be as low as it is today."

ROBERT BAGGS: Believes Unison have got their priorities wrong.

Don't mention the gypsies

THE National Union of Journalists (NUJ) has told its members to promote the special contributions gypsies and travellers make to British life in music, craft work and other cultural activities.

It's all part of an NUJ campaign to give wider and more positive coverage of travellers, especially in their relations with settled communities over issues such as housing and settlement programmes, and schooling.

Members are instructed: "... only to mention the word gypsy or traveller if strictly relevant and accurate, and to seek travellers' views and consult the local travellers (?) where possible."

 The National Union of Teachers were also quick off the mark, issuing a 4-page A4 brochure to teachers on the terrorist attacks. But despite the traumatic effect of the terrorists attacks being timed to coincide with pupils travelling to schools, the NUT didn't seem too concerned about the effect of this on children. NUT advice was about the well-being of pupils and teachers from minority ethnic groups and any negative or stereotypical views of Islam and Muslims being expressed by parents. In fact much of the brochure was given over to challenging Islamophobia, tackling racism and any tensions that might arise between different ethnic groups. Since the terrorist attacks in July the politically correct brigade within the police, the trade unions and the media have succeeded in turning truth and logic on its head. Within a month of innocent British people being slaughtered, apparently it is no longer us who are the victims or Islamic fanatics who are to blame.

In New Labour's '1984' Britain, it is the Muslim community living here in Britain which must have our sympathy and it is the British people who are responsible for causing their discomfort.

Terror helpline but it's not for the Brits

POLICE HAVE set up a free advice telephone line to support and reassure Londoners after the terror attacks.

But the helpline is not for ordinary hard-working Britons enquiring whether they can get to work without being attacked by Islamic extremists. It is for those in the Muslim community who may want to discuss fears of revenge attacks since the bombings. A police spokesman told the London Evening Standard:

"Some people and communities may feel particularly vulnerable, and it is hoped that members of the minority communities will feel encouraged to contact the advice line."

British War Graves attacked in France

THE HEADSTONES of 42 British soldiers who fell in combat in the First World War have been desecrated in what police believe may have been the work of Islamic fanatics.

The scale and nature of the attack at the Albuera cemetery, near Arras in Northern France were such that police think Muslim extremists could have been responsible. At least one Molotov cocktail was used, and the attackers even set fire to a register of war dead and a visitors' book. Albuera cemetery dates from the Battle of Arras in 1917. There are DESECRATED: The Albuera cemetery, near Arras in Northern France.

253 graves, including one containing a German soldier and 110 of unidentified Britons.

Remains recovered from the battlefields after the war were buried in the cemetery, which had to be expanded to accommodate them. Soldiers from several different units, including the Royal Fusiliers and Staffordshire Regiment, are among the dead.

Neglected War Graves in Britain

THERE are more than 100,000 war graves in the UK and the majority of these graves are well looked after in church grounds and cemeteries.

But with the memories of the conflicts of the last century fading, some graves away from the mainstream cemeteries have become neglected.

Most of these graves do not actually contain the remains of our fallen heroes, but were put there as a mark of respect for a soldier, sailor or airman whose body was never returned to their home town or village.

LONE GRAVE: Still important.

These graves are still important as a reminder of those brave men and women who fought for our freedom and they should not be allowed to pass into decay. Have a look around your small churchyards, and identify any neglected war graves. Then take the time to give it a tidy and while you are doing so, remember the sacrifice this generation made to keep us free.

"Following in the footsteps of their grandparents"

Just plain ignorant ... or are they re-writing history?

WHEN pupils from St Michael's school in Handsworth arrived at Hereford Station they were dressed as children of 65 years ago in a bid to retrace the past.

The Hereford Times reported: "In the bleak days of the early 1940s, frightened children from Birmingham would arrive with gas masks and meagre possessions at Hereford Station.

"A lifetime later, that procession was re-enacted as youngsters from a Birmingham school followed in the footsteps of their grandparents..."

But hold on a moment, if you look closely at the photograph of those Birmingham children (above) you will see that they couldn't have been following in the footsteps of THEIR grandparents because their grandparents wouldn't have even been in Britain, let alone Hereford, but thousands of miles away living their lives in Pakistan.

The story was either an appalling gaffe made by a pup-reporter or a sinister attempt to re-write history. Establishing Britain's multicultural society 30 years before immigration from Pakistan commenced can only be an attempt to brainwash today's children into believing it began much earlier than it actually did.

REALITY: British children left their home and family not knowing if they would see them again.

Community demands BNP official stays at the helm

Report by John MacLeod

SCOTLAND'S biggest Trafalgar bicentennial celebration will go ahead despite a New Labour witch-hunt against the British National Party official behind the ambitious event.

Scottish BNP Secretary, Kenny Smith, set up a voluntary community group to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the famous battle - which ended Napoleon's dream of invading Britain. This followed an initial approach to the local authorities for an official celebration which fell on deaf ears.

With the help of colleagues from his local Community Council, of which he is Vice-Chairman, a neighbouring Community Council, Historic Scotland and a few other interested parties, Kenny has organised an event that is expected to draw in the crowds and bring enormous benefits to the Moray Firth area of the Highlands.

The event will take place at Fort George in Inverness on the 22nd of October and will feature a military parade with standard bearers and pipe band, commemorative service, naval display, RAF flyover and helicopter display, live traditional ceilidh and folk music, highland dancers, re-enactments and historical displays, children's entertainers, the Northern Constabulary's dog display team, a BBQ, and will end with a firework display.

Over 2,000 people are expected to attend the event that will bring social development and educational benefits to a deprived area.

Yet despite organising such a wonderful free event for the whole

KENNY SMITH: "I owe much of my community spirit to the experience and knowledge I have gained in the British National Party."

Moray Firth community to celebrate our heritage and to remember the 4,500 Scots who fought for our freedom at Trafalgar - including the locally born assistant surgeon Niel Smith, who tended to the dying Nelson aboard HMS Victory - Labour Party activists attempted to scupper the community project, by demanding that Kenny was removed from his post simply for being a BNP official.

A media campaign against Kenny ensued but despite the efforts of hostile journalists, Labour Party councillors, MPs and MSPs and their bully boys, they failed.

The Inverness Courier was even forced to admit that they had taken a great deal of criticism over their campaign against Kenny as both the Community Council and Trafalgar at the Fort rallied unanimously to his defence.

Kenny said, "The support I have received has been overwhelming. Both the Smithton & Culloden Community Council and Trafalgar at the Fort are non-political, voluntary and non-profit making organisations, that aim to improve the lot of the whole community."

When quizzed on his BNP role Kenny added, "I am proud to be an official representative of the British National Party and I can honestly say that while I have never brought politics into either of these non-political organisations, I owe much of my community spirit to the experience and knowledge I have gained in the BNP. I believe it is essential that all our members should make a positive contribution to benefit their community in their home area."

TRAFALGAR BICENTENNIAL:

The event will take place at Fort George in Inverness on the 22nd of October and will feature a military parade with standard bearers.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Overseas nurses send British student nurses to the supermarket

by Tina Wingfield

NHS TRUSTS are opting to employ foreign nurses at the expense of newly qualified British-trained nurses.

Newly qualified nurses have been told by college trainers that they "may as well work for a supermarket" because there are no nursing jobs available in the National Health Service.

On completing their three-year training course, at a cost to the NHS of £15,600 each, nursing graduates from Suffolk College in Ipswich and Southampton University in Hampshire were informed that local hospitals could not afford to employ them. A Royal College of Nursing representative, Keith Murray, reported that in 30 years of nursing he had never known a situation as bad as this.

Nursing graduates across the country are struggling to find employment because a growing number of NHS Trusts - in preparation for competing in the new 'payments by results' market place being introduced by the government - are resorting to desperate measures to reduce budget deficits quickly.

Staffing costs account for 30% of overall budgets and Trusts can cut costs significantly by employing foreign nurses and reducing staff numbers. Foreign nurses are cheaper than UK trained nurses and, in the last six years, Britain has employed more than 70,000 overseas nurses, mainly from India and the Philippines. As a representative of Unison pointed out: "Trusts get experienced overseas nurses on the cheap and keep them at lower grades."

In addition to facing competition from abroad, British nurses are also contending with a total freeze on recruitment imposed by increasing numbers of NHS Trusts.

While Trusts may succeed in reducing their budget deficits, the trade off is that British nurses, highly trained at the expense of the British taxpayer, are consigned to supermarket shelf-stacking and, with nursing staff spread more thinly in hospitals, patient care is compromised.

STUDENT NURSES: Back in the 1950s student nurses were valued members of staff but now they are being pushed out by nurses from overseas.

Immigration skews HIV/AIDS stats

SEVEN out of ten people with HIV in south Essex come from Africa and are now living in Southend.

The vast majority of those carrying the disease come from Zimbabwe and were already infected when they arrived in Britain.

Tina Penn-Gillam, an HIV adviser to Southend Council's community services scrutiny committee, has warned that immigration is making HIV statistics misleading because most immigrants get HIV through heterosexual contact.

"For our indigenous population the largest number of HIV transmissions still remain with men who have sex with men. The figures have been skewed by the immigrant population."

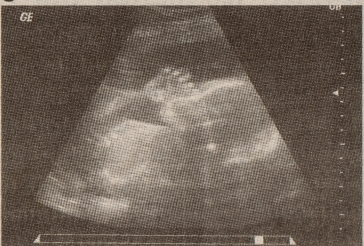

The Terrence Higgins Trust in Southend has acknowledged the changing make-up of HIV sufferers and has organised support groups for African men and African women to work alongside their long-established support group for gay men.

Girls targeted for abortion in Leicester

INDIAN women in Leicester are returning to India to get abortions for unwanted female babies.

The practice is growing in the city because of an increase in the dowry demands being made by families to which any daughter marries into.

Campaigners are so concerned that they have called upon Leicester NHS Trust to end the practice of telling women the gender of their babies when they go for a scan.

Britain's farmers are Britain's future

Steve Johnson on buying British and breaking the supermarket stranglehold on our food producers

THE TRADITIONAL British family farm will soon be a thing of the past and our country will be less and less able to feed her own people without depending on imported food.

Multinational supermarket combines are using monopoly purchasing power to force farmers to take prices for their produce too low to let them earn a living. Just four giant supermarket combines now control the food market because over 90% of Britons do all or most of their shopping in them. Farmers therefore have to sell their produce to the big chain buyers despite being ruthlessly exploited. From every pound you spend on food in their stores, only 34p goes to the farmer - a share that has dropped by 28% since the late 1980s. Supermarket running costs have changed little and the prices shoppers pay have not dropped so this extra money is going straight into the pockets of the global multinationals such as US-based WalMart who run the big store chains.

That has left farmer after farmer to go to the wall, driven off the land that in many cases has been cultivated by their family for generations.

European Union bureaucratic regulations, ignored by farmers elsewhere, have hamstrung our farmers in many areas and even £3 billion a year in Common Agricultural Policy subsidies doesn't help in the long term because it undermines real farming by paying farmers to grow things our people don't want to eat and discourages innovation and diversification.

Over the last decade despite a near 50% increase in total food consumption, the output from British farming has fallen.

This is because our food now increasingly comes from abroad with 15% of lamb, 25% of pork and bacon, and 33% of beef being imported. It's the same with our vegetables and cereals and even at the height of the British apple season, in September, over half the apples on supermarket shelves came from abroad.

Imported food is not good for the consumer. Foreign meat is not always produced to the same high standard of hygiene and humane rearing as our and depend for our food on politically unstable and potentially hostile Eastern European and Third World states.

The British National Party believes that the power of the multinational monopoly supermarkets must be broken and replaced with stores run by and for ordinary British people. Stores like Waitrose - the only food store which treats farmers with respect, paying them a proper price and having a policy of never making any farmer dependent on them for the bulk of their produce sales. It is because there are no parasitic City shareholders to pocket excess profits that Waitrose can pay its own workforce, who own it, a decent wage without ripping off either producer or consumer.

Whilst the global supermarkets still rule the roost, farmers should join together in producers' co-operatives to build enough collective muscle to get a decent price for their goods. Just like Dairy Farmers of Britain, a co-op of 3250 farmers which is now the country's third biggest milk producer.

The alternative in the short term is more ruined farmers driven off the land, and a question mark over the future of the British farming industry. In the long term it means a Britain unable to feed her own people and forced to rely on foreign countries which, because of global warming, will be struggling to feed their own population.

In tomorrow's world, if any country can't provide food for its own people, it will face famine and destruction. Britain's farmers are Britain's future.

own produce - it was imported meat that caused the 2001 foot-and-mouth disease disaster. Imported vegetables and fruit, especially from Third World countries, are often treated with pesticides and other chemicals that are illegal in Britain.

Importing food is not good for the country because it undermines our balance of payments in the short term, and in the long term it undermines our independence and, possibly, survival. The British people only survived the great wars of the 20th Century because we were able to just about feed our own people from our own land. Today we couldn't do this,

Family farms need producers' co-operatives

SCOTTISH dairy farmers are being driven out of business by agri-business combines and supermarkets who use their monopoly buying power to deny them a fair price for their milk.

There are just 1,400 dairy farmers remaining in Scotland when twenty years ago there were almost 5,000, and now the remaining smaller family-run farms are being run out of business.

The major supermarkets have recently increased the price of their milk but have not passed on any of the extra profit to the milk producers. This has resulted in a protest by dairy farmers and the blockading of milk depots to cut off the supply of milk across the country.

But this could result in supermarkets importing milk from abroad which will not only drive more of our dairy farmers to the wall, but will make the country dependent on imports to survive.

In the short term our dairy farmers must follow the example of Dutch dairy farmers by joining together in producers' co-operatives to process their own milk and thus cut out one layer of greedy profiteering middlemen.

In the long term they must campaign for the British National Party, the only political party in Britain today which will take on the forces of multinational greed that are taking away their livelihoods, and which will end the dependence of the British people on imported food produce.

BT prepares to offshore last UK call centre jobs to South Africa

BRITISH Telecom is preparing to outsource their remaining UK based call centres to South Africa. Ebrahim Rasool, premier of South Africa's Western Cape province, disclosed that BT were amongst a number of UK firms seeking to relocate to the province, attracted by a cheap labour force and smaller time zone difference than Asia. British companies are looking to South Africa as an alternative to India because a better standard of English is spoken. Customer research has shown that the heavy Asian accent and limited vocabulary of telephonists from cities such as Mumbai, or Karachi in Pakistan has proved difficult for the British public to understand.

SKYLARK: In its heyday, the rocket programme employed more than 250 scientists and engineers.

Skylark - the space programme sunk by Labour in 1977

SKYLARK, an innovative and highly successful part of the British space programme has finally drawn to a close after the launch of its final mission.

The Skylark sounding rocket programme began in 1955 and in its heyday employed more than 250 scientists and engineers.

The first Skylark, carrying scientific experiments into suborbital space, flew in 1957 establishing Britain as Europe's leader in the space race in direct competition to the Americans and Russians.

Early development work on Skylark was done at the Royal Aeronautical Establishment at Farnborough and the Rocket Propulsion Establishment at Westcott.

Despite its success the Labour Government ended public funding for the programme in 1977 but fortunately sufficient motors were left to continue research flights.

The 441st and last Skylark blasted off on its final mission last April carrying experiments to investigate the muscle protein, actin, and turbulence in evaporating liquids. So from now on, what's left of Britain's science and research industry will have to conduct their experiments using the more expensive American-built Oriole range of sounding rockets.

RESISTING THE CHINESE INVASION: Manufacturing is the basis of every healthy economy and if we are to protect what remains of our 'made in Britain' industry we need to start introducing import controls immediately.

BNP is right to warn over economic threat from China

by Steve Johnson

FOR OVER a year now the British National Party has been warning of the economic threat to Britain from China because of its massive resources of cheap labour and high-skill economy.

Now top economic and business experts are agreeing that our concerns are well-founded, vital, and being ignored by establishment politicians. Writing in the Sunday Times, business editor, William Lewis, laid it on the line in words that Freedom couldn't have put better:

"The rise of the Chinese economy is... the single most important public policy issue facing the UK. Should we let Chinese companies buy our best and biggest corporations when we are not yet allowed to buy theirs?"

"What are we doing to ensure that the exodus of manufacturing jobs to China is matched by the creation of new higher-end jobs in the UK?"

William Lewis went on to warn: "Remember that the flip side of the Made in China deflation is serious industrial dislocation," (and expensive petrol, as Freedom reported last month).

What this all means is that if China is given unrestricted access to our home markets and industries, the next generation of Britons graduating from our universities will be competing with millions of well educated Chinese engineers, chemists, designers and so on.

Using his extensive business contacts, the Times business editor warned of a specific dark cloud on the horizon:

"Insolvency experts tell me that the only real impediment to the vast majority of cars sold in Europe and the US being made in China is shipping capacity - in other words actually being able to transport cars for sale here. That is being addressed, so much so that a leading bankruptcy lawyer said to me recently that he couldn't think of any good reason why there will be any mass production of cars in Europe in 10 years time".

That means the closure of Rover will be followed in a few years by that of every Peugeot, Vauxhall, Ford, Nissan and other vehicle plant in Britain. With all the job losses that will go with it.

Meanwhile the Director of Economic Policy Studies at the Hudson Institute,

"There is much to admire in what the Chinese are doing because they are rejecting the globalised capitalist system and using expertise and hard work to build a nation state able to provide for its people."

Irwin Stelzer, has warned that the threat from China is not just economic. He listed a string of buyouts of key firms by the Chinese in recent years.

"China has bought 40% of Sinopec's Northern oil sands project in Canada at an ultimate cost of $2 billion; taken a 10% stake in an Azerbaijan field and pipeline; and invested in Venezuela's oil industry in return for President Hugo Chavez's promise to divert some of his nation's crude from America to fuel-hungry Chinese factories. A few months ago Lenovo, a Chinese computer manufacturer, bought IBM's PC business for $1.7 billion" - (again reported in Freedom).

There is much for British Nationalists to admire in what the Chinese are doing because they are rejecting the globalised capitalist system and using their expertise and hard work to build a nation state able to provide for its people.

If we were Chinese, we would fully support the Chinese Government's wise and far-sighted nationalist policies, but we are not, we are British and we need to defend our home markets from foreign predators.

Manufacturing is the basis of every healthy economy and if we are to protect what remains of our 'made in Britain' industry we need to start introducing import controls immediately.

Employing nurses from India proves race relations blunder

HEALTH chiefs in Oldham have been slammed for making a race relations blunder by signing up nurses from India to work at the town's hospital.

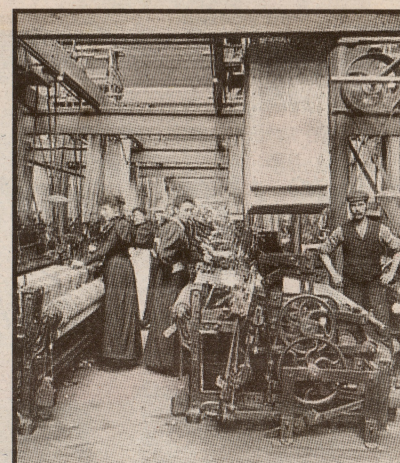

But it's not Oldham's beleaguered white residents who are complaining, but the town's rapidly growing Pakistani community.

Razia Shamim, a non-executive member of the Pennine Acute Hospitals NHS Trust and race relations adviser explained:

"The tension and military conflict between India and Pakistan makes this decision dangerous."

"The predominantly Pakistani ethnic minority community, which the trust serves, are unhappy about this recruitment drive. Employing Indian nurses is politically insensitive. The nurses would find themselves in a difficult situation with the ethnic minority community."

The BNP believes it is fundamentally wrong to poach nurses from India or Pakistan, countries where they are desperately needed. The Government should be funding a massive training scheme for British nurses so that they can meet the needs of our hospitals.

ROCHDALE: There's been textile printing in the town for 140 years.

Cheap imports close Rochdale's last textile mill

OVER 140 years of textile printing in Rochdale ended last month when Alexander Drew stopped production at its Mellor Street depot.

Managers at Drew's, which also dyes and finishes textiles, said the flood of imports from abroad had hit the company's order books and made the decision to cease trading inevitable.

David Lean, the managing director, said Drew's had fought tooth and nail to retain a viable share of the market but couldn't compete with cut price imports from China.

At its peak in the mid-1990s the company employed about 350 workers after it carried out a £21 million investment programme, but still couldn't compete with cheaper imports.

The job losses are a big blow to Rochdale which now has the second highest unemployment rate in Greater Manchester.

German bosses export British jobs to China

MORE THAN 100 jobs at a Wolverhampton company making components for showers are to be shipped overseas.

The Kohler Mira factory in Bushbury is to close with the work being switched to China and Germany.

Mira made the first ever thermostatic showers back in 1937 which were extensively used in factories, hospitals and schools. In 1959 it developed the first thermostatic mixer shower designed to cope with the unique UK domestic water supplies, which made Mira a household name.

Staff at the plant in Shaw Road were told they were being made redundant because of a restructuring of the company's operations.

One worker at the factory, which is due to close in April next year, emailed Freedom with the news:

"I've read for the last six months in Freedom about British jobs going to China and now it has happened to me. I have been with Mira for eight years and never missed a day's work. But once we were taken over by the German firm everyone knew the writing was on the wall.

"Isn't it sickening, German bosses taking over a British company and then exporting jobs to China.

"Unless something is done there won't be any manufacturing jobs left in the West Midlands for the next generation. I hope the BNP are standing a candidate in Bushbury in May, there's a lot of support here."

Those who inspire our ideology: No.3 Bob Blatchford

Make the best of your own resources before trading with other countries

Robert Blatchford (1851-1943) was one of the founders of the Labour Party. But his ideas and writings show just how far the New Labour of Blair and Brown has sunk from the high and patriotic ideals and genuine concern for ordinary working-class Britons of its founders.

A former Army Sergeant-Major, Bob Blatchford founded the Manchester branch of the Fabian Society in 1890. The following year he launched a weekly Socialist newspaper, The Clarion and helped set up the Independent Labour Party, forerunner of today's Labour. He went on to set out his ideas in two important books, BLATCHFORD: He was critical of the country's infatuation with free trade.

Merrie England (1893) and Britain for the British (1902).

As the titles of these works suggest, Blatchford's socialism, like that of many of the other Labour Movement pioneers, was of a robust patriotic kind rooted in a concern for the well-being of ordinary British folk. Unlike modern socialists who think everyone is the same, Blatchford argued that: "Men are made what they are by two forces: heredity and environment. Your intellect and character are at birth what your forefathers made them". He praised the British people for being "intelligent, industrious, strong, and famous for their perseverance, their inventiveness and resource".

On economic issues, Blatchford slammed the infatuation with Free Trade that was to take over the Labour and the Tory Party years later: "My ideal is that ... people should make the best of their own country before attempting to trade with other peoples".

He warned the people of Britain: "Don't you see that if we destroy our agriculture we destroy our independence at a blow, and become a defenceless nation? Don't you see that the people who depend on foreigners for their food are at the mercy of any ambitious statesman who chooses to make war upon them?"

Inevitably Blatchford and the patriotic wing of the Labour movement fell out with the internationalists who were infiltrating and taking it over. In 1915, along with H.G. Wells and other leading British socialists, he founded the Socialist National Defence League to support "the eternal idea of nationality". As the National Democratic Party, the League won ten seats in the 1918 General Election. Sadly it subsequently folded, when it could have formed the base for a genuinely British socialist patriotic movement, free from both Marxism and Fascism. That, is something that has been left for the British National Party to do.

THE CLARION: Blatchford's weekly newspaper that helped set up the Independent Labour Party.

Traffic congestion puts London's heritage at risk

Please help save Sloane Square

by Margaret Haynes

LONDON'S Sloane Square owes its name to Sir Hans Sloane, the founder of the British Museum, who purchased the manor of Chelsea early in the 18th century.

The square lies at the east end of the trendy King's Road and at the south end of the more conventionally smart Sloane Street. The Square has two notable buildings: Peter Jones department store and the Royal Court Theatre. The River Westbourne is carried over the tube station in a large iron pipe.

But now, the Royal Borough of Kensington & Chelsea council want to turn Sloane Square into Sloane Junction by destroying the park to make way for a crossroads. London's squares provide breathing spaces at the end or middle of thoroughfares - welcome open spaces with trees and the occasional 'happening' which are part of our capital's character. Sloane Square with its refreshing fountain has been called "an oasis in the heart of the city" - musicians play there and the whole square is lit up at Christmas.

It is typical of the mentality of local government today to want to destroy something historic and beautiful just in order to relieve traffic congestion. To change the make-up of Sloane Square so dramatically is another attack on the remaining true Londoners still living in the capital. Removing the trees, benches, and the beautiful fountain will rip the heart out of one of London's most traditional neighbourhoods.

SALLY WOOD

Straight talking!

Let's have some thunder from the pulpit

IT HAS been observed that in the natural world there are some species which will interbreed in captivity whereas in their natural state they choose not to.

On observing the different races of man it is quite noticeable how distinctly different they all are. This leads to the supposition that although our ancestors had the opportunity to interbreed with other races, they chose not to. I wonder why should this have been?

Geographical barriers alone would not have been a sufficient barrier. One can only conclude that language was the main obstacle. Even in Stone Age times neighbouring tribes would have spoken a different tongue. Coupled with this would have been the strong cultural influences within the tribe. Later it would have been the religious leaders, who would have held great sway over their people. To marry outside the faith would have been tantamount to condemning one's soul to eternal damnation.

Today we live in an artificial setting more akin to a human zoo. We have lost the exclusivity of our language and even our culture is under attack. We have already lost one of our religious holidays, Whitsun and how long before Easter goes the same way? Now it is rumoured that the singing of the hymn 'Onward Christian Soldiers' is to be banned in all our churches.

What on earth can our religious leaders be thinking? Did not Jesus say: "I am the way the truth and the light. No one comes to the Father except through Me".

Do the Church of England and the Catholic Church still believe that Christianity is the one true faith? If so, why aren't their voices heard thundering from the pulpit, denouncing the construction of religious houses to the worship of other faiths in this Christian land?

Their very silence creates a vacuum which others seek to fill. The time has come for them to speak out and display that leadership and guidance that their ancestors would have done.

The changing face of Britain should have the public worried

THE DAWNING realisation that our police force has been transformed in one generation from Dixon of Dock Green to an execution squad is hard to assimilate.

It is however just as much a victim of this government's disastrous policies as the rest of us. As one police officer said on the Six O'clock News: "There are tens of thousands of illegal immigrants in London and we haven't a clue on the background of any of them". If that wasn't enough, we then discover that one of the failed suicide bombers had been granted British citizenship only months after being imprisoned for five years for violent mugging. Another was being provided with generous funds from the government as well as a roof over his head.

It all makes one inclined to think that the lunatics really have taken over the asylum. Then there was a family of failed asylum seekers who refused to leave the country. After losing benefits the mother of six from the Congo became homeless and five of her children were taken into care - a further burden on the already hard pressed taxpayer. Any sane government would have returned them home on the first available flight to the Congo.

The changing face of Britain should have the public worried and flocking to support the BNP, but this cannot be relied upon. There are so many people out there who are apathetic about voting and who cannot be bothered to make the effort to leave their comfortable armchair and television for the polling booth.

I say to these people: just look around you at your children, your grandchildren, or think of the family you hope to have one day yourself. If you want to safeguard their future, you have to vote for a party that can make a real difference - the British National Party.

Bangladeshi is replacing cockney!

THE COCKNEY accent is disappearing from its spiritual home in the East End of London because any English youngsters still living there are now copying the voices of Bangladeshi immigrants, research has claimed.

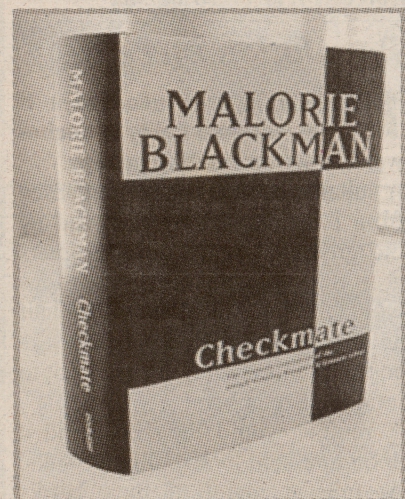

A study of speech patterns carried out in Cheapside by Sue Fox, a socio-linguist at Queen Mary College, University of London, found that Cockney is being replaced by a hybrid of Bangladeshi and British vowels. "The majority of young people of school age are of Bangladeshi origin and this has had an impact on the dialect," she said. "Young people are using a variety of English which we might say is Bangladeshi-accented. It includes referring to slippers as 'skets', trainers as 'creps' and using the word 'nang' to suggest 'good'. Cockney was first used to describe the East End accent in the 18th century.

COCKNEY: East End artful dodgers in Whitechapel between the wars.

Checkmate - a novel suicide bomber

A NEW children's novel about a suicide bomber is flying off the shelves of Britain's bookshops and on its way to becoming a best-seller. Checkmate, by Malorie Blackman, attracted a lot of media attention in the wake of the suicide bomb attacks on London's transport system. But any similarity between the book and the events of July 7th ends there. Blackman's story isn't about religious fanatics encouraging their followers to bomb London and kill innocent people to promote their faith.

CHECKMATE: The everyday story of white terrorists and bombers.

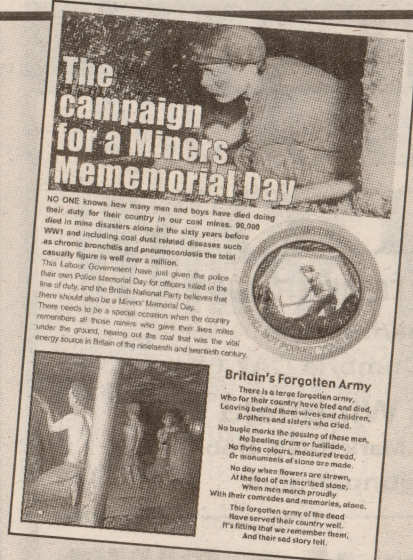

It's about the evil leader of a white terrorist group forcing a mixed race teenage girl to become a bomber. The novel, the third exploring race issues, is apparently fired by the author's own experience as a "victim of racism" growing up in Britain after her parents arrived from Barbados. Maybe a British author fired by the horror of the London bombings will write another novel about suicide bombers, but this time a little more true to life.

BNP campaign for a Miners' Memorial Day

NO ONE knows how many men and boys have died doing their duty for their country in our coal mines. 90,000 died in mine disasters alone in the sixty years before WW1, and including coal dust related diseases such as chronic bronchitis and pneumoconiosis, the total casualty figure is well over a million.

This Labour Government has just given the police their own Police Memorial Day for officers killed in the line of duty, and the British National Party believes that there should also be a Miners' Memorial Day.

There needs to be a special occasion when the country remembers all those miners who gave their lives miles under the ground, hewing out the coal that was the vital energy source in Britain of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Hail the return of a clean King Coal

COAL MINED from Britain's coalfields would provide a significant part of the country's energy needs under a British National Party government.

Combined with renewable energy sources and a limited nuclear option, British coal would provide our necessary fuel alternative as the peak oil crisis begins to bite.

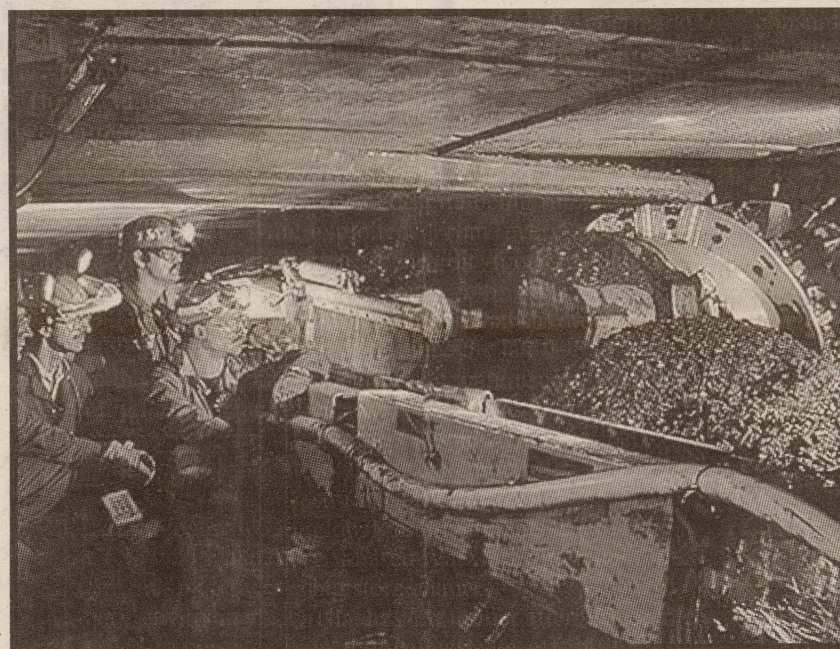

But the return of King Coal under the BNP would see many vital changes in the industry, including strict limits on imported coal, improved working environment and safety standards and massive investment in the research and development of Clean Coal Technologies (CCT).

CCT will make the coal mined in Britain's pits, lower-cost, more efficient and environmentally friendly when used in power stations, steel mills, cement plants and other industries.

Dirty coal produces dangerous emissions that threaten the planet. The three major pollutants from coal firing are Sulphur Dioxide (SO₂), Nitrous Oxide (NO_x), both of which cause acid rain, and Carbon Dioxide (CO₂) which is a greenhouse gas.

If coal is to play a revitalised role in power generation then these emissions will have to be significantly reduced or eliminated.

Clean Coal Technology cuts emissions by reducing the formation of pollutants such as NO_x and through cleaning flue gases after combustion. It also makes coal burning more economically viable because thermally efficient systems mean less coal is used to generate the same amount of power.

Britain's coal industry desperately needs regeneration and new investment. In 2004, total UK production was just 25.1 million tons. Deep-mined output was 20% lower than in 2003 due to pit closures at Longannet, Prince of Wales, Betws, Clipstone and Selby.

Imported coal in 2004 from Australia, Colombia, Poland, South Africa and the USA rose to 36.2 million tons. Our coal industry today employs just 9,300 people. 6,600 are employed in deep mines with the remainder in the opencast sector. The majority of jobs are in England, over 7,000, Scotland has over 1,200 and Wales 950.

As at 31st March of this year there were 42 opencast sites and 8 major deep mines in production.

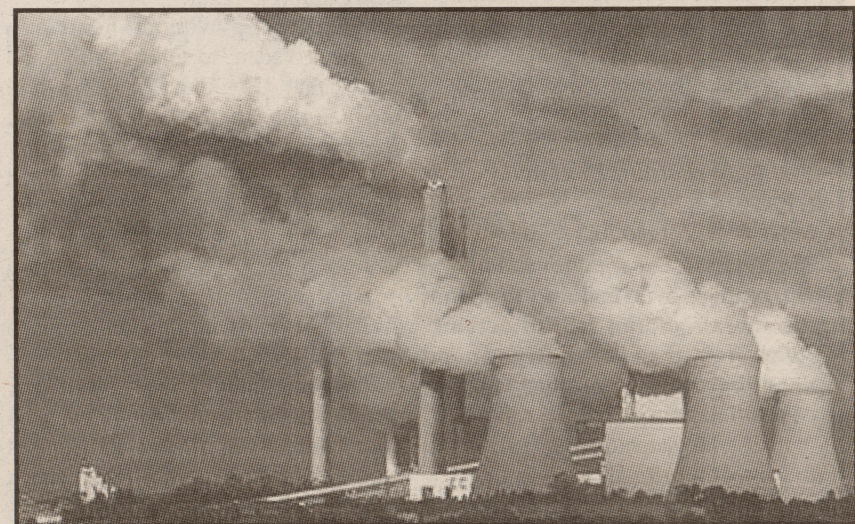

BRITISH Gas staff facing the Baxe are being asked to train their successors in India.

The firm announced last month that 350 jobs in Oldham would be transferred to Delhi.

Now, as a final 'insult to injury' employees have been asked if they would be willing to move temporarily to India to teach workers how to use a new computer system.

Margaret Mould, who has worked for British Gas for nine years, told the Oldham Chronicle: "I think it's absolutely outrageous that they have the audacity to ask people who are getting sacked to go and train their successors."

The company is cutting 2,000 administrative and data-processing posts in Greater Manchester and Birmingham and moving them to India because there is no health and safety legislation and an abundance of cheap labour.

POLLUTION: Clean Coal Technology cuts emissions by reducing the formation of pollutants such as NO_x and through cleaning flue gases after combustion.

Shehzad Tanweer.

Aldgate bomber acclaimed as "a hero of Islam"

A FUNERAL procession for British suicide bomber, Shehzad Tanweer, was held in his family's village in Sumandri district, near Lahore, Pakistan. Thousands of people took part in the procession and then turned up again the following day to pay homage to a man they regard as a 'shahid' (martyr).

A 'qul' ceremony was held for Tanweer. During 'qul', the Koran is recited to earn merit for the deceased so as to speed his journey to paradise. But in Tanweer's case this was deemed hardly necessary because his shahid-status as a suicide bomber is believed to take him straight to paradise where 72 virgins are waiting for him. The crowd hailed the 22 year-old Muslim from Leeds as "a hero of Islam" - rather a strange accolade for a man whose bomb killed seven people at Aldgate station.

Just like rewarding the suicide bombers

by Mark Reed

TUC General Secretary, Brendan Barber, caused a storm of protest by calling for taxpayers' money to be given to the Muslim Community in Beeston in Leeds.

Barber told a conference of Pakistani and Bangladeshi community leaders at the Beeston Hamara Centre that the trade unions would be calling on the Government to provide millions of pounds in funding for the area in order to alleviate the conditions that might have contributed to the reasons behind the suicide bombings.

A phone-in programme on Radio Leeds was forced to stop taking calls as non-Muslims living in Beeston bombarded the switchboard to complain about the TUC proposal. One caller pointed out that it was taxpayers' money which funded Mohammad Siddique Khan's gym in the basement of the Hardy Street mosque where the bombers were primed.

Another said that the TUC proposal was "akin to rewarding the Muslim community in Beeston for producing suicide bombers."

Condemnation came from all quarters including Sikh and Hindu groups in Beeston.

Nick Cass on the RWB

I WOULD like to thank all the people who attended the Red White and Blue festival this year. I think most will agree with me that this time we got it right.

Families and children really came to the fore this year, and that is something that we have been striving to achieve for the last five years. I'm certain that this will inspire more families next year to come along, when, I assure you, the RWB will be much bigger and even better.

I would like to thank all the people who helped make this event a success: the set-up team who arrived a day before us and left a day after us, spending over a week on site and those individual helpers. A special mention must go to the caterers who cooked all week for the set-up team, and then donated all the profit made over the weekend back to the party!

The regional stalls this year were fantastic, with Scotland winning the best stall award. Each one had something superb on offer, and it made the weekend to have such a large choice of foods and drinks from our very diverse native cultures. The stalls are something which are just getting better each year, and I would like to thank all the regions for their sterling efforts. Scotland are now the regional stall champions which I hope will inspire other regions to work harder next year to beat them.

For this festival the music and entertainment were fantastic, so much so that the politics took a bit of a backstage. What a range of talent on show, we had 3 year-old little girls singing nursery rhymes to rock bands, traditional folk music, violin classics, jazz, bagpipes, political comedy songs, sing along classics, poetry and much more. I would like to thank all the entertainers and those members who helped out with the political events and speeches - you all helped make it a great weekend.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife Suzy, who has put up with the stresses and strains amazingly over the course of the weekend. I couldn't have done it without you!

EMOTIONAL BUT DEFIANT: BNP Chairman, Nick Griffin, tells the RWB Family Festival that going to prison will not silence him from voicing his concern over the growth of Islam in Britain, but admits that being parted from his family for three years will be a painful price to pay.

Life without telly

WHEN the BBC decided to take it upon themselves to try to get Nick Griffin jailed for telling a few home truths about Islam, I decided that my money would be no longer abused in this way and decided not to renew my TV licence.

For a month now I have lived life without television and it has left me more time for doing things like visiting family, friends, outdoor and social activities and of course persuading the many more people I meet that BNP policies are right for Britain.

Television is an instrument of social control for people with no purpose in life. Those manipulating the BBC at the moment are dumbing down standards and filling viewers' minds with sensationalism and trivia. They appear to loathe anything that might promote traditional family values or patriotic sentiment.

BBC is 'selective'

ON 27th July BBC reporter, Phil Mackie, admitted on the Brian Hayes programme on Radio 5 that the BBC censors the truth about Muslims.

Mackie had spent the day in Birmingham covering the arrests and their aftermath. This included coverage of the Press Conference at which the chairman of the Central Birmingham mosque, Mohammed Naseem, called Blair a liar, doubted the integrity of the police and security services, demanded evidence that the alleged bombers were Muslim and doubted the existence of al Qaeda.

Commenting on these statements Mackie said that such remarks would not normally be broadcast because the BBC was "selective" in its broadcasting of Muslim statements.

Mr. D. Nicholson, Hucknall.

It's a Chinese bank

I THINK it important that the readers of Freedom know that the initials of the HSBC actually stand for the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank - another Chinese controlled company.

In their television adverts, HSBC tries to present a global image to hide the true nature of their background.

Corruption makes poverty

THE grinding poverty of Africa is the fault of Africa itself.

A World Bank economist recently stated that:

"Africa has not only received enough aid to bring itself up to Western standards but has had three times as much."

Africa's woes are caused by the wretched and contemptible corruption that seems to be endemic in this troubled continent.

The late President Mobutu's personal wealth at his death exceeded the external debt of his country, Zaire.

Malawi is one of the poorest countries in the world but when the then Malawi president 'for life' Hastings Banda died he left a personal estate of more than £1 billion. This is a country where most people live on less than £7 per month.

We can throw all the money in the world at Africa but until the corruption is eliminated it will be wasted as much in the future as it has been in the past.

Gordon Rees, Leeds.

Totalitarian PC

I WAS delighted when I bought the Shuttleworth collection print of "After me the Flood".

The picture features Battle of Britain ace Guy Gibson VC, and his faithful companion, Nigger.

I emailed my wife at her work, Choices Video, to tell her the good news that Guy and Nigger would be hanging in the hall when she returned home, only to have my emailed blocked saying it contained 'racist language'.

I called Choice's Video and they admitted that Guy Gibson's dog wasn't acceptable to their system. What would the Canine Defence League have to say about this? More importantly what would the 50,000 brave men of Air Crew, who gave their lives during the Second World War, think of such totalitarian political correctness.

Name and addressed supplied.

Lesson of communism

APOLOGISTS for the London bombings suggest that young Muslim men become radicalized because of the "oppression of Muslims around the world."

It's true that hundreds of millions of Muslims live in miserable circumstances but who is actually to blame for these circumstances?

There are around 50 Muslim countries and not one of them is viable economically and/or has a functioning democracy.

When it was found that communism could only bring misery and poverty it was declared obsolete. Surely the same conclusion should be reached on Islamic Government, based on its wretched failures everywhere over 500 years.

In 1955, South Korea and Egypt showed identical per capita incomes; today, Korea beats Egypt by 5 to 1, despite the fact that America made Egypt its second leading aid recipient for three decades.

The true oppressor of Muslims is Islam itself, with teachings that destroy any chance of progress, peace or freedom.

Doreen Medwin, Bridgend.

Population increase

IT MIGHT be a good idea if British National Party branches were to set up reading groups.

A suitable book could be purchased from Excalibur Books and read by the group - two or three chapters at a time and discussed. Sessions would not need to be more than half an hour long and lightweight books could be chosen initially so as not to intimidate members.

A review would then be decided upon and sent to Excalibur Books. At present many of their books don't have any reviews and this gives the impression that no-one has read them or that only a few have been sold.

One of the ploys of the left wing education system has been to restrict access to information among ordinary people by reducing levels of literacy and making reading seem intimidating. This must be reversed. Our people must have the confidence and ability to inform themselves and avoid indoctrination.

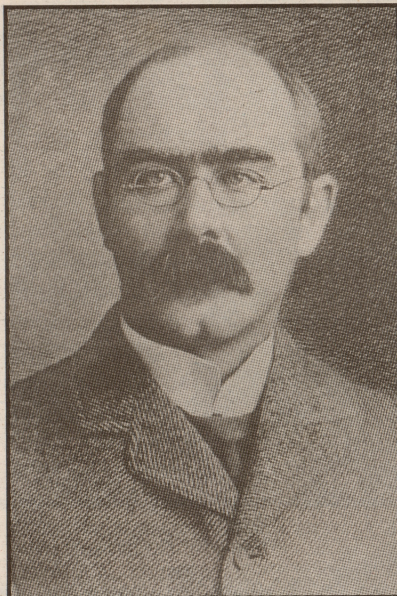

Marina Smethurst, Nottingham.

'The Stranger'

Kipling's poem is so relevant today

ALTHOUGH written at the turn of the last century, Rudyard Kipling's poem, The Stranger, still has something to say today, helping to make sense of the recent terrorist attacks in London and the psychology of the perpetrators. The poem is a warning to us on this island, especially our native born. All British people should read it, know it, and understand it.

It is because such work is relevant today that the liberal elite are trying to airbrush Kipling from our consciousness, but what they fail to understand is that what has once been written will always be able to be found. Poems such as The Stranger will be there to try to help guide each generation when they become lost and confused by what is happening in Britain today.

■ RUDYARD KIPLING

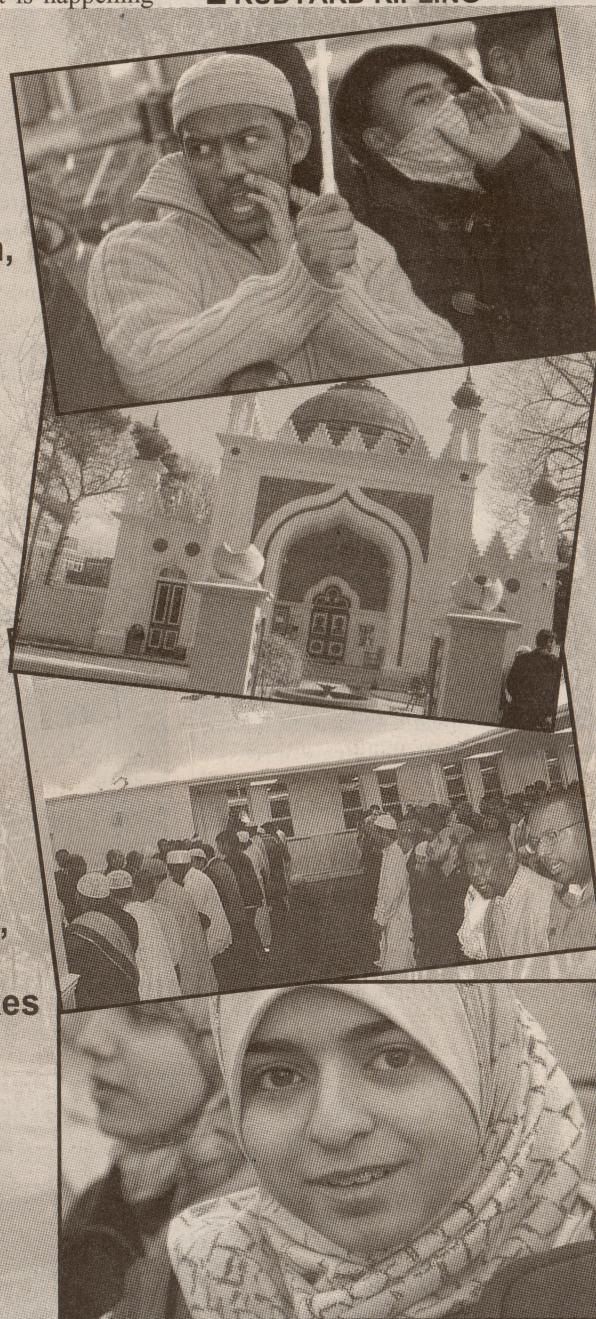

THE stranger within my gate,
He may be true or kind,
But he does not talk my talk—
I cannot feel his mind.
I see the face and the eyes and the mouth,
But not the soul behind.

The men of my own stock
They may do ill or well,
But they tell the lies I am wanted to,
They are used to the lies I tell,
When we go to buy and sell.

The Stranger within my gates,
He may be evil or good,
But I cannot tell what powers control—
What reasons sway his mood;
Nor when the Gods of his far-off land
Shall repossess his blood.

The men of my own stock
Bitter bad they may be,
But, at least, they hear the things I hear,
And see the things I see;
And whatever I think of them and their likes
They think of the likes of me.

This was my father's belief
And this is also mine:
Let the corn be all one sheaf—
And the grapes be all one vine,
Ere our children's teeth are set on edge
By bitter bread and wine.

EYECATCHING: Havering BNP's stall in Romford High Street.

Plenty of support for the BNP in Romford

Over 100 copies of 'Freedom' sold in just 3 hours

by Alan Bailey

ON SATURDAY 27th of August activists from Havering held a successful and high profile paper sale in a local town centre.

Support for the British National Party was evident as soon as Freedom went on sale in Romford High Street.

We were kept busy throughout the morning, selling in excess of one hundred newspapers.

We made our presence known with the aid of a loud hailer, an eye catching sales pitch and a team handing out leaflets.

People came forward not only to buy a paper, but to shake our hands and offer words of support and encouragement. A list of names and addresses of enquirers and potential new members was also collected.

This was the first of several activities planned for in and around London which will promote public awareness of our party, take our message directly to the British people and break down the stereotype image and myths with which the media like to brand us.

Elections are not won in the weeks before an election, but in the months before, and London's campaign for the borough council elections has already begun.

Support Freedom of Speech

- wear the wristband!

AS PART of our continued campaign to defend freedom of speech, the British National Party has produced a red, white and blue wristband emblazoned with the message 'DEFEND FREE SPEECH'.

The wristbands cost £1.00 each plus 50p p&p and are selling like hotcakes. Hundreds have already been snapped up by BNP units in Yorkshire where the wristband is proving popular with the public.

Money can be made by BNP units and individual supporters by selling these wristbands. They are ideal to be sold in the street whilst distributing BNP leaflets or selling Freedom.

BULK PRICES:

10-49 wristbands: 80p each (post free)

50-99 wristbands: 65p each (post free)

100-500 wristbands: 55p each (post free)

500-999 wristbands: 50p each (post free)

1000+ wristbands: 45p each (post free)

The Defend Free Speech wristbands come in a large and a small size. Please state quantity of each required. Cheques made payable to 'Excalibur' and sent to: Excalibur, PO Box 116, Leeds, LS27 9WW.

AN ESSENTIAL ITEM: The British National Party's red, white and blue 'Defend Free Speech' wristband.

Leaflet drive and papersale in Gateshead

GATESHEAD BNP held another successful paper sale and leaflet drive on Saturday 13th August in their local town centre.

A table selling literature was set up in the high street and manned by a couple of activists while the remainder split into 3 groups leafletting all the popular approaches. Over 1500 leaflets were handed out on the day and seventy newspapers were sold. The response from the public was really encouraging with many saying they would vote for us at future elections.

One couple were so impressed they volunteered to make up the 4th leafletting team, giving up an hour of their shopping time to promote the British National Party.

MP assists BNP push in Coventry

COVENTRY & Warwickshire Branch of the British National Party made the front page of the Coventry Observer, thanks to the help of the city's Member of Parliament.

The multi-millionaire Labour MP, Geoffrey Robinson, had maintained a politically correct silence over the suicide attacks on innocent members of the British public in London, Turkey and Egypt, no doubt in the interests of race relations.

But he had no such worries about attacking the BNP after local campaigners distributed the new 'Islamic Terror - Labour Failure' leaflet and his tirade hit the headlines of Coventry's main free paper which is delivered to 210,000 homes.

"Robinson's intervention is just what was required to help promote our campaign," Chris Turner of Coventry BNP told Freedom.

"Now most households in Coventry are aware that it is only the BNP which is prepared to speak out about the root causes of the terror attacks in London such as Tony Blair's illegal war in Iraq.

"If previous BNP publicity in this newspaper is anything to go by there should be a lively debate on the letters' page over the next few weeks."

6,000 'Land & People' leaflets for the Great Yorkshire Show

YORKSHIRE BNP has spent the summer visiting country shows, fetes and markets to give out leaflets.

The 'Great Yorkshire Show' is the biggest country show in Yorkshire, attracting over 80,000 people each year. The three-day event celebrates British culture, traditions and heritage helped along by wholesome entertainment, country folk, farmers and people interested in the British way of life.

A team of BNP activists attended the show and handed out over 6,000 specially prepared 'Land And People' leaflets. Andy Kershaw explained the reasoning behind the day of action. "People who attend such shows are already half way to being a British National Party voter. The BNP is the only political party to champion the British way of life. The leaflet is for country conscious people - and shows we are more than a one-issue party."

Selling 'Freedom' helps Julie pay the bills

JULIE Ford is employed in the hotel industry, along with her husband David. They joined the BNP after the European Election. Last September Julie's hours at work were cut because of a fall in bookings and she started to look for a part-time job to make up her income.

"I was going to get some pub work but it was all late hours and it would have meant me struggling to meet my early morning shifts at the hotel." Julie from East Kent, thought she would try selling Freedom and has sent in a report of her progress.

"As I like to talk about politics and especially to correct people's misconceptions about the BNP, I thought I would try selling Freedom and see if I could supplement my income that way.

"I spent three mornings leafleting our estate with the 'If only I could seek asylum' leaflet. If someone was out in their garden I would stop and talk and if they were receptive I asked if they would like Freedom each month.

"I then started actually knocking on doors, putting three hours aside every Tuesday morning and two hours from 6pm to 8pm each Tuesday evening.

"I had eight firm sales from speaking to people leafleting and got another 18 from that first day. After five months I now have a round of 125 which is growing every month. It takes two Tuesdays to service the existing round and I spend the third Tuesday in the month canvassing for new sales. My target is a round of 200 by January 2006.

"I have had just six people drop out, and well over half pay for their paper with a pound coin and tell me to keep the change. I clear over £60 every month tax free and there's no travelling because my sales are all within walking distance.

"I like selling Freedom because it feels like I'm doing something to help the BNP. I'm also my own boss and can be flexible when I work and how long I work. It's extra money that Tony Blair doesn't know about and it helps towards paying the bills and keeping our heads above water."

Kirklees BNP launch town centre paper sales push

by Nick Cass

KIRKLEES BNP has a lot of catching up to do with regard to street papersales against the likes of Bridlington BNP which sells 180 copies of Freedom in the town centre on a Saturday morning. But an activity this month went a long way towards establishing the party in three towns in the area.

Three teams of local members hit the streets of Cleckheaton, Heckmondwike and Birstall to see what the public's response would be to the British National Party's monthly newspaper. After a morning of getting soaked to the skin, the three teams retired to a local cafe to analyse the results.

Gavin Frain, BNP councillor, David Exley, and Joyce Parker selling Freedom in Heckmondwike.

More than 120 papers had been sold in three hours. Many people gave a donation on top of the price of the paper and pledged their support or offered to come along to sell the paper the next week. What was even more encouraging were the number of shoppers who although not buying a paper, gave a sign of support in the form of a smile, wink, nod of the head or a surreptitious 'thumbs up'. Papersales are something which we are developing in Yorkshire, and it will be a weekly activity in the Kirklees area. Town centre paper selling not only brings in the money required to fight elections, but more importantly it brings in new activists and enquiries.

This hard-hitting anti-immigration leaflet draws attention to the alarming figures that show that Britons will be a minority in their own country by 2060.

BUILDING A FUTURE FOR OUR CHILDREN

Links the BNP's election success in Burnley with our policies on law & order and immigration. Also includes details of membership and the BNP's publications.

KEEP OUR CHILDREN SAFE

"These children would be alive today if our spineless politicians had the guts to declare war on paedophiles," says this powerful leaflet condemning child abusers.

CRIME IS OUT OF CONTROL!

STOP THE BUILDING

CRIME IS OUT OF CONTROL

With soaring crime rates hitting inner city, suburban and rural areas alike, this leaflet outlines the BNP's 'zero tolerance' stance in combatting crime.

STOP THE BUILDING!

Under Labour, as with the Tories, Britain's greenbelt land is being built on at a frightening rate. We look at the people and companies behind this rural destruction.

Worrying rise in 'green' crime

Welcome to Orwell's '1984'

"The purpose of Newspeak was not only to provide a medium of expression for the world-view ... but to make all other modes of thought impossible. It was intended that when Newspeak had been adopted ... a heretical thought - that is, a thought diverging from the principles ... should be literally unthinkable." - '1984'

THERE'S been a worrying rise in 'green' crime in East London according to a local newspaper, the East London Advertiser.

In August four green thugs were found guilty at the Old Bailey for gunning down Jadie Brissett in London Fields, firing a hail of bullets at the 18 year-old from a convoy of cars.

An insider at the East London Advertiser believes there are going to be more reports like this in the paper. "Reporting crime in East London has become a minefield", she told Freedom.

"One sub-editor likened a recent issue of the paper to "something the BNP would put out" and a colleague of mine said that when people had finished reading the paper, they must sometimes feel like 'writing off to join the British National Party'.

"The changing face of East London is naturally reflected in 'East London

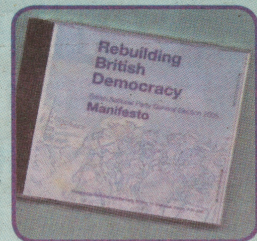

GREEN CRIME: A deliberate and calculated ploy to lessen the visual impact of the ethnicity of the perpetrators of a crime.

crime', but when reporting crime it can seem that the majority of it is being committed by ethnic minorities. "The East London Advertiser has tried to lessen the visual impact of the ethnicity of the perpetrators of crime they report by making them 'green'.

"It's to try to banish any heretical thought - that is, a thought diverging from the principle that our multicultural society is anything other than enriching and exciting." Welcome to George Orwell's '1984' in 2005.
